Director Robert Alanz's first "time budget" film was produced as a "community project" in Franklin, Illinois using mostly unknown local talent. The result is a movie largely unknown here but that goes a long way to being the true "indie-budget" film.

The year is 2004. Adam Taylor (GARY GOW) and Gordon Brent (RILEY DUHAMEL) are still haunted by a tragic accident that resulted in a young girl's death 20 years earlier. In therapy, Adam is tormented by the memory of his father's abuse, a conflict that his therapist believes has caused him to create an alternate reality, where he believes he can "time travel". A competing rock 'n' roll memorabilia dealer, Todd Hagen (GARY SUGARMAN), envies Adam's reputation for making high-dollar deals and his uncanny ability to always find rare memorabilia from the past. Hagen consistently undermines Adam's reputation, claiming that everything he sells is counterfeit.

Soon, Amy (KATHERINE REED) a sexy young woman, who may be working for the Attorney General's office, mysteriously shadows Adam around town as suspicion begins to surround his credibility as a dealer. When Adam meets Kelly Walls (JODI LONDON), an attractive paraplegic woman, he tries to add her to his list of helixed sexual conquests. To his surprise, Kelly proves to be more than the desperate victim of circumstances he thought she was. The two fall in love and a self-centered man learns compassion for those who time has left scarred for life. In the end, things may not be what they seem, as the truth about Adam's past comes back to haunt him in a surprising twist of fate.
